Support services contact list

If an individual seeks help relating to a domestic and family violence matter:

- listen and be empathetic
- affirm they're seeking help
- direct them to one of the special helplines or regional support services funded by the Queensland Government.

Staff at these services are trained and experienced at working through the often complex issues associated with domestic and family violence and can connect them with the right range of supports including counselling, legal and court support, and accommodation.

In dealing with an individual, you need to be clear that you:

- cannot provide legal advice
- cannot advocate on the person's behalf, including making further phone calls
- cannot guarantee any particular outcomes.

This document also includes references (including email and phone numbers) to key support services relating to particular scenarios involving domestic violence (go to page 11). This includes where a person may be at imminent risk of harm, or may require housing support or legal assistance.

Further information and resources:

A full list of domestic and family violence services is available at www.qld.gov.au/domesticfamilyviolence. This includes regional domestic and family violence services, court services, legal services and accommodation support services.

The Queensland Government is dedicated to helping prevent domestic and family violence. Further information about domestic and family violence can be found on www.qld.gov.au/community/getting-support-health-socialissue/about-domestic-family-violence:

- what is domestic and family violence
- the signs of domestic and family violence
- how to get help for someone who you think may be the victim of domestic and family violence.

The Queensland Government funds a number of helplines to provide immediate support to people experiencing domestic and family violence.
